

UCCOM Curriculum Vitae (CV) Citation Guide

OVERVIEW

- All CVs may not look the same. Examples are provided but looking at additional CV examples through exploration can be a helpful tool.
- Use Standard APA Style. APA is formally known as American Psychological Association. This is the style most used to cite sources for academic documents, specifically, journal entries and books. This order, structure and format allows a reader to focus on content over the presentation of the CV.
- LastName first middle initials of authors as listed in the paper. Your name should be bolded. Title of article. (Year, Month). Journal, volume (issue): pages. PMID: ID number
(What is a PMID or PubMed Reference): ID Number: a permanent and unique combination of numbers and letters used to identify an article, book, or other source. The number/letter combination is assigned to the publication once it is entered into the PubMed page and can be found on the record page. The NIH (National Library of Medicine) assigns the PMID.
- Continue to update and input information as you progress through medical school
